Dental Experience

As an undergraduate student at the University of Sheffield, UK, I acquired the knowledge and clinical skills central to the practice of dentistry, and have continued to apply and develop these skills during my vocational training and work as a dental associate.

During my vocational year, I worked in a busy National Health Service (N.H.S) public practice in an area where dental caries and chronic adult periodontitis were highly prevalent. I was able to learn the importance of phasing treatment plans and achieving stabilization of the dentition. In addition, I acquired invaluable hands-on experience in key areas of general dental practice including Restorative work, Exodontia, Prosthodontics and Paediatrics. My training also taught me about the general day-to-day running of a practice which included dental policies and protocols, managing my patient lists and working together to ensure that the practice ran efficiently.

On successful completion of my vocational training, I worked in a mixed public and private, long-established practice, south of London. Here I built on my clinical skills and grew confident working on my own initiative. I became familiar with a wide range of dental materials, such as composites, glass ionomers, amalgams, precious and non-precious metals and ceramics. My private books expanded and I gained experience in cosmetic dentistry, namely teeth whitening, ceramic anterior and posterior coronal restorations, composite restorations and acrylic and cobalt chrome dentures. Working alongside an implant specialist, orthodontists, hygienists and several experienced dentists highlighted the importance of a team-based approach in patient management.

I remain proactive in attending conferences, courses and training activities, as part of my continuous professional development. I have a keen interest in postgraduate education and success in my Membership of Joint Dental Faculty (M.J.D.F) examination has encouraged me to look into other areas of dentistry.

Outside of my dental experience in the UK, I spent four weeks volunteering in a hospital dental clinic in a small village, Kikuyu, in Kenya. As part of this experience I provided emergency dental services to the local community. I also visited local schools and delivered Oral Health Education. This experience helped to build on my knowledge and interest in dental public health.

I have settled well into the dynamics of associate life and confidently meet my targets whilst maintaining high standards of care. I pride myself on excellent communication skills and being able to work efficiently under pressure. I am a friendly, caring and hard-working individual. I enjoy working as part of a motivated team and interacting with people from all different backgrounds, at work and socially.

I have thoroughly enjoyed working within the U.K. dental system over the past four years. At this stage in my career I am keen to experience dental practice overseas and learn new techniques.
